Willimantic Strike
In Sixteenth Month;
Ranks Are Unbroken

The Field of Labor

T

HE strikers have moved from one town to another, from one city to another, from one state to another, from one country to another. They have fought all the wars of the world. They have fought all the battles of the nation. They have fought all the battles of the continent. They are the men who have fought all the battles of the world.

SLIDE WAGES, SLIDE!

When the strikers marched into the strike town, they went into the strike city. They went into the strike state. They went into the strike country. They went into the strike continent. They went into the strike world. They went into the strike universe. They went into the strike infinite.

A WARNING TO LABOR BANKS

The strikers have moved from one town to another, from one city to another, from one state to another, from one country to another. They have fought all the wars of the world. They have fought all the battles of the nation. They have fought all the battles of the continent. They are the men who have fought all the battles of the world.
